

Entrepreneur DNA Results

Vito Samudra

Thanks for taking the assessment! See your Report below.

Vito's Entrepreneur Profile

Our research shows the majority of successful founders fitting into one of nine main "personality profiles". These profiles represent a combination of strong personality traits that postively correlate with entrepreneurship.

“The Achiever”

The Achiever simply refuses to lose, and will work night and day to ensure that they don't.

In particular, Achievers:

- ① Thrive in high-pressure and challenging environments
- ① Are incredibly hard workers that don't fear failure
- ① Possess a 'strong personality' and a natural ability to motivate others
- ① Excel at taking calculated risks and pushing the boundaries of what is possible

Vito's Strongest Traits

These are their greatest entrepreneurial strengths.

 Strength	 Entrepreneurial Analysis
STRONGEST TRAIT 99 Very High Achievement Achievement-oriented people set highly ambitious goals and are willing to go beyond expectations to achieve them. ① They will put in more effort than most to get something accomplished ① They are not afraid of setting big and ambitious goals ① They are willing to make sacrifices in the name of achieving their goals ① It is important for them to exceed others' expectations ① They value status and recognition from others	Vito, you know that hard work and dedication are essential to getting things done. You set ambitious goals and strive to exceed expectations. You're not afraid to give up on something in the name of success. You love learning new things and mastering new skills, proving your expertise in the process. You also believe that you deserve to be noticed by others. Your continuous efforts and devotion usually take you where you want to be, so stay focused on your goals and remain resilient. This attitude is extremely helpful to you in your founder journey. Be mindful of your workload and watch out for burnout – it can happen to even the highest achievers if they are too engaged. Take time to relax and recuperate. Set smaller goals along the way so that you can measure progress and celebrate it on a regular basis. Enjoy the course of self-improvement while continuously challenging yourself beyond what is expected by others. With clear objectives, unwavering commitment, and dedication, nothing is out of reach. The only setback for high achievers like you is that you might want to win at any cost. Beware of compromising your integrity, and keep your values close at hand.
97 Very High Adaptability Adaptable people adjust to new situations easily, and can thrive in a variety of different environments. ① They embrace and are energized by new experiences and challenges ① They are extremely flexible and can adjust to different situations quickly ① They can quickly incorporate new information and data to align their strategy ① They can multitask and switch between projects with ease ① They thrive in ambiguous and fast-moving environments	If you possess a high level of Adaptability, you have an innate ability to adjust to different situations quickly and can cope well with adversity. It is easy for you to incorporate new information into your strategy because you are naturally curious and flexible. Your secret weapon is your contingency plan. You mentally prepare for multiple outcomes, which leaves space for new ideas and enables growth. As a leader, you are the visionary type capable of conceptualizing the future without blindly sticking to a singular belief. Moreover, you are a champion at handling various workflows at once. Remember to focus on completing the projects you engage in. Because you tend to switch between activities so smoothly, you may sometimes overlook details and fail to finish a task. This can be avoided by thoughtfully dedicating time and attention to long-term issues. If your Adaptability score is too high, you might be perceived as slightly unsettling and a 'flip-flopper'. To remain grounded, foster commitment to the ideas that matter to you.
93 Very High Innovation Innovative people are known for thinking in different and creative ways. They gravitate towards unconventional ways of solving problems. ① They regularly "ask why", come up with new ideas, and propose unique solutions ① They excel at brainstorming and work best when they can experiment ① They are not only able to develop new ideas, but are also able to put those ideas into action ① They highly value knowledge creation, creativity, and resourcefulness ① They intrinsically seek change and challenge the status quo	You are highly driven by exploration and learning, always looking for ways to add value. You are comfortable with experimentation and risk-taking, which are necessary traits for a successful entrepreneur. Your confidence in your abilities and willingness to enter new territories leads to positive results, earning you praise and recognition from your team. You thrive in environments where you can materialize your vision, build disruptive products, and challenge the status quo. Your groundbreaking spirit brings greater creative output and contributes to higher success rates for the team or the organization as a whole. The more innovative you are the more complex your ideas may become. Not everyone will be on the same page as you and some people may reject your approach. Look for a middle ground where novelty and tested methodologies complement each other.

Improvements for consideration

These are areas of concern that are typically associated with extreme scores on your most and least dominant personality dimensions. These may not all be applicable to you, depending on how pronounced your individual characteristics are.

 Weakness	 Entrepreneurial Analysis
10 Moderately Low Emotional Control People with low levels of emotional control may be less resilient and less equipped to manage stressful situations. ① They may need extra time to recharge and recover from difficult situations or rejection ① They may have a short temper and their temporary mood might affect their judgment ① They may be reactive and sensitive to any negative feedback or criticism, which can be disruptive to a team ① Although they will usually apologize and be genuinely remorseful afterward, they may have outbursts, be irritable, or act unprofessionally from time to time ① Colleagues or team members may see them as self-conscious, negative, and overly sensitive, and as a result distance themselves or avoid confrontation with them	You may be reactive and overly sensitive to criticism which creates difficulties when dealing with complicated situations. Your team might feel like they are walking on broken glass around you, which can negatively affect your relationships. Pay attention to emotional triggers and learn to pause before responding. Taking moments of respite between conversations or tasks. Breaks can help even out your moods so that intense feelings don't get the better of you. Mindful breathing and exercising can calm you down. Put yourself in other people's shoes and try not to take their words and actions personally. Most importantly, reduce pessimistic self-talk and stay focused on growth opportunities.
28 Moderately Low Trust People with low levels of Trust typically question others' intentions, and may struggle to delegate. ① They tend to be suspicious and skeptical of others and their motives ① They may have a hard time delegating tasks, building an efficient team, or resisting the urge to micromanage ① They may have a hard time collaborating with others ① They might suspect that others conspire against them ① Others may see them as untrustworthy	When you exhibit signs of low Trust, it can be challenging for you to build relationships with others and foster a sense of collaboration. People may perceive you as untrustworthy, making communication and cooperation hard. You may be too skeptical of others and their intentions and have trouble splitting work with team members. To change that, start delegating small tasks, gradually increasing their size and complexity as you become more comfortable in your ability to trust others. This habit not only erodes Trust between yourself and others but also hinders interpersonal relationships. It is important to recognize that low levels of Trust can create an environment where people don't feel included and as a result, resist sharing their ideas. It will be progress for you to admit your mistakes to others because this will encourage them to be honest with you too. If you can, tone down your judgment and show more gratitude and appreciation to your team.